Welfare reform in the wake of austerity has fostered increased interest in selfhelp initiatives within the community sector. Amongst these, time banking, one of a number of complementary currency systems, has received increasing attention from policy makers as a means for promoting welfare reform. This book is the first to look at the concept of time within social policy to examine time banking theory and practice. By drawing on the social theory of time to examine the tension between time bank values and those of policy makers, it argues that time banking is a constructive means of promoting social change but is hindered by its cooption into neoliberal thinking. This book will be valuable for academics/researchers with an interest in communitybased initiatives, the third/voluntary sectors and theoretical analysis of social policy and political ideologies.
